Kittens Liked Shoe Laces. Husband Took a Cat Nap. Pets Indulged in Lunch

Assaulted the Cats, and Wife, Also, She Tells Judge, But She Relents, and When the Baby Comes-

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—It was simply a case of too many kittens—too many kittens in a given place at a given time. The place generally was under the young husband's 'eet; 'he time—when he came home from an honest day's toll and sought to enjoy, in peace and tranquillity, the delights of domestic happiness.

Tail like any other prisoner, she burst into a flood of grief and instantly released.

"Judge," she begged, turning her fine large eyes, brimming with tears, on Magistrate Finn, "it was all a mistake. He didn't mean to hurt me, I am sure, and I don't want him sent to prison. Please, judge, I am so sorry I ever had him locked up, and I hope you'll let him go."

Now, it happened that Louis was very proud of those brown ties, and when he came to and contemplated the damage wrought by the kittens during his catnap, he rose in his wrath and said things and did things that he afterward came to regret.

Had Large Vocabulary.

Josephine, his pretty young wife, who had fendly imagined her husband's vocabulary of expletives did not extend beyond an occasional "darn," was so horrified by the flow of unusual language that when he rushed upon her pets and began to kick them violently with the maltreated Oxfords, she threw herself, shrieking, upon his neck and
